

What Do You Do? - The Absurd Storytelling Party Game

by Douglas Caldwell © 2015

What Do You Do? is an absurd storytelling party game for 3 or more players. Weave a tale using your item cards to think your way out of the absurd situations and prove your mental agility with a reference to pop culture.

Surprise yourself with your own Maguyver like creativity and ingenuity as you attempt to take down Superman with a banana or bust out of prison with a bottle of lube, and flip off the gods of sanity as you work in a quote from Spongebob while firing your car mounted bazooka. It's your story, make it a good one.

After all the players have woven their yarns, the Adjudicator selects the best story and the best use of the pop culture reference. The player with the best story gets two points and becomes the next Adjudicator, the player with the best reference gets one point.

Contents:

60 Situation Cards
60 Reference Cards
300 Item Cards

The Cards:

Item Cards (White) give players objects, powers, abilities or even hindrances. The cards are not always clear, it is up to your imagination and wit to use them wisely.

Situation Cards (Grey) give you the situation you face and pose the question 'What do you do? They tell you how many item cards players need to draw.

Reference Cards (Blue) include references to pop culture, TV, movies etc that players can attempt to reference during their answers. Paraphrasing or ingenious referencing to the reference is allowed.

How To Play:

Create one face down stack for Situation Cards, one face down stack for Reference Cards and several face down stacks for the Item Cards. It is recommended that you decide how many Situation Cards you are going to play to now. It will take approximately one hour for 4 players to play 10 situations.

Whoever sat down last to play becomes the First Adjudicator.

The Adjudicator picks a Situation Card and tells the players how many Item Cards they need to pick up from the Draw number. (see fig. 1)

The Adjudicator reads out the Situation Card and finishes the situation by asking the players "What do you do?"

The Adjudicator then selects a Reference Card and declares "The reference is (Read Card)".

A nice Adjudicator may take the time to repeat the cards while players consider their answers.

Players take turns starting on the Adjudicators left to tell the story of what they would do in the situation using their cards. Players may use however many of their Item Cards they wish during their story and can also attempt to include a reference to the Reference Card.

Players are limited to the items they have in their hand and may only use additional items if they naturally occur from a card they are using. The Adjudicator decides if they have gone too far.

After everyone has answered with their story, the Adjudicator chooses the best story and the best use of the reference. The player with the best story is given the Situation Card, 2 points and becomes the next rounds Adjudicator. The player who had the best reference is given the Reference Card and 1 point. The Adjudicator may withhold the Reference Card if no one manages to come up with a decent use of the reference.

In the event an Adjudicator has difficulty deciding on the best story or the situation calls on players to compete directly, players can call each other out on what they say and argue about why they would win and the others would lose. The players may debate the answers until the Adjudicator reaches a decision.

Some Situation Cards call on players to battle with each other. These cards are marked (see fig. 2) and Adjudicators should decide a winner by progressively determining who has been knocked out of play until a victor emerges.

After the hand, all Item Cards from the round are put into a used stack on your table that players may draw from on the next turn. Players may not hold onto any item cards between turns.

The winner is the player who has the most points when you run out of Situation Cards to play.

In the unlikely event of a tie, the player with the least amount of points decides the tie-breaker face-off challenge.

Printing & Storage

For a serious deck of cards, print the game on White A4 Premium cardstock of 216 gsm or higher. Printing the back of the cards with grey and blue would also make it look really nice.

If however you are interested in a light-weight portable game or your friends just cant be trusted not to touch when they have greasy fingers, basic A4 printer paper is recommended. While the cards are easily identifiable as item cards, situation cards or reference cards, printing in colour is still preferred.

When printed correctly the cards have dimensions of 5cm x 5cm. Any 5cm x 5cm or 2" x 2" box with suitable length will suffice to store the game.
